

RESEARCH SUPPORT SERVICES

Role of Department of Laboratory Medicine

A key member of the National University Health System, Singapore's first Academic Health System, the National University Hospital plays a significant role in medical research. As such, the Department of Laboratory Medicine aims to support its clinician researchers in their studies, such as conducting routinely available tests or arranging and performing tests in collaboration with relevant research group. A fee will be collected for the processing of tests and services provided.

Our Research Support Group currently handles enquiries from numerous sources and they have the following responsibilities:

- Handle research enquiries requesting laboratory support
- Process application forms with appropriate IRB approval
- Create budgetary and official quotations
- Source for test kits and consumables
- Procure suitable reagents for each study
- Analyse specimens
- Retrieve/store specimens when required
- Issue laboratory results (hard/soft copies)
- Process internal and external billing depending on the source of funding
- File documents (study protocol, billing, analytics, request forms, etc)
